U.K. Troops Join Beirut Peace Force

BEIRUT - The first British soldiers arrived Tuesday to join the international peacekeeping force in a city that is becoming increasingly uneasy about continuous sectarian fighting and Israeli maneuvering. As sniper fire sounded in the nearby Chuf mountains throughout the day, 22 members of the Queen's Dragoon Guards flew in from Cyprus as an advance party of 80 British soldiers to arrive

Israeli troops, backed by five tanks, swept through the villages of Shoueifat and Kfar Shima, just southeast of Beirut. in an afternoon search of homes for weapons and guerrillas, police said. Directly east of the capital, Lehanese Christians and Druze exchanged sporadic sniper and machine-gun fire throughout the day after a one-hour artillery battle at dawn.

Christians said the latest exchange in the fourmonth hattle began when the Druze militiamen shelled the Christian area of Aley, eight miles (15 kilometers) east of Beirut.

All shops and schools were closed and the main Beirut-Damascus highway was blocked by sand-bag barricades manned by the gunnen.

The British force, the only one to arrive since Lebanon appealed for wider participation in the peace force, will take up positions in southeast Beirut near the zone policed by 1,200 U.S. marines - an area where there were confrontations in January when Israeli troops tried to cross U.S. lines.

START Talks to Resume Today

GENEVA (Reuters) - U.S. and Soviet negotiators begin a new round of strategic arms talks Wednesday with virtually no sign of movement on basic positions.

The negotiations are expected to resume in low-key fashion, overshadowed by parallel bargaining on European-based medium-range nuclear missiles. In public statements, the two sides have taken strikingly opposed stands. U.S. negotiators say slow progress has been achieved, but that Moscow contends there is total deadlock.

The U.S. chief negotiator, Edward L. Rowny, has said that he believed a 50-50 chance exists of reaching an agreement this year. The Soviet negotiator, Viktor P. Karpov, says the United States wants to continue the arms race.

Reagan Vows to Renew Fight on Church Issues

By Francis X. Clines

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan, exhorting the nation to "face the future with the Bible," received repeated standing ovations from Christian broadcast preachers when he vowed to renew his efforts for a ban on abortion, a restoration of classroom prayers, and tax credits for parochial school

With his budget proposal delivered to Congress, the president made a point of emphasizing other major topics on Monday, including certain social issues and the disarmament campaign. As Mr. Reagan addressed the religious broadcast-ers, Vice President George Bush carried a letter to Europeans from Mr. Reagan that contained a pledge to meet the new Soviet leadership personally to sign his "zeromissile plan.

The president's day seemed to demonstrate his willingness, and perhaps even his relief, to push beyond the endless budget problem and take up additional issues.

Hospital Strike Ends in Quebec

QUEBEC — Hospital workers in Quebec ended a one-day walkout Monday but more than 100,000 teachers maintained their 6-day-old strike as the Quebec cabinet met to discuss emergency legislation.

The 71,000 members of the Social Affairs Federation, the province's largest social services union, canceled their walkout after less than 24 hours. An official said the government had also settled with the Federation of Labor's 22,000 hospital workers. But more than 100,000 teachers remained on strike. The breakthrough occurred

While his audience welcomed his re-endorsement of their views on several sensitive religious and social issues, Mr. Reagan gave no clear indication of how high a priority he would accord them in the new Congress. The administration pursued these measures in Congress for a short period last year, but then de-emphasized them.

Some of Mr. Reagan's political advisers are wary of these issues, especially when they try to measure the effect of his anti-abortion stance on the women's voting bloc. "I know many well-intentioned, sincerely motivated people believe that government intervention not living human beings. Medical evidence indicates to the contrary and, if that were not enough, how do we explain the survival of babies who are born prematurely?"

There were murmus of "amen" and strong applause as Mr. Reagan promised to revive this and other sines in the Congress. However, he gave no sign that any new strategy would be pursued.

"I want you to know some-thing," he declared in raising the issue of voluntary public school prayer. I am determined to bring that amendment back again and again and again and again, until we succeed in restoring religious free-dom in the United States."

Majority in Poll Opposes Reagan Economic Plan

WASHINGTON - Public support for the Reagan economic program, regarded as a major factor in the implementation of most of the president's budget requests in 1981 and 1982 has largely evaporated, according to the findings of a Washington Post-ABC News poll.

In sharp contrast to those years, most citizens now oppose key aspects of Mr. Reagan's budget proposals, according to the poll. A 55-to-39 percent majority, for example, is ready to forgo the 10-percent cut in marginal income tax rates scheduled for July, although Mr. Reagan says he is firm in his refusal to delay or eliminate that reduction.

A 59 to 37 percent majority also favors cutting military spending to reduce the national debt. By $2 to 44 percent, however, the public opposes cutting spending on social programs to reduce the

By Richard Bergholz

Los Angeles Times Service LOS ANGELES - President Ronald Reagan has damaged American hopes for peace because the United States has become identified throughout the world as "bellicose, one to be feared instead of admired and trusted," according to former President Jimmy Carter.

He said the U.S. economy has descriprated to the point that there now exists a fear of "permanent". deficits in the federal budget. But the state of the nation remains "inherently strong," Mr. Carter said, because of an inner strength that transcends what happens in Washington. Mr. Carter made his statements in a session Monday with the editors of the Los Angeles Times be-fore attending a fund-raising event for the planned Carter presidential library in Atlanta.

In general, Mr. Carter avoided strident criticism of the man who defeated him in the 1980 presidential race. He cited a number of instances in which he agrees with Mr. Reagan's policies and repeatedly stressed that he did not want to second-guess the president. But he did not hide his concern that Mr. Reagan's foreign policy has changed the worldwide perception of the United States.

He said he thought a fear of the United States "has caused a weakening in our relationships with our allies and friends around the world. certainly in Europe, perhaps even in countries like Japan."

Reagan policies domestically bave resulted in what Mr. Carter called "the generation of almost unbelievable deficits," and it now appears likely, he said, that his successor will "generate more delicits in four years than all the peacetime delicits of all the presidents who have served in 200 years." "Something like this has never happened before, and I don't think anybody can really predict what is going to happen concerning a permanent inflation rate, permanent deficits, permanent interest rates and so forth," he said. He recalled that his administration had wrestled with federal budget deficits of $24 billion to $30 billion — and now the Reagan administration is projecting budget defi-cits of $200 billion and the deficit could go as high as $300 billion.

All of this leads him to conclude, Mr. Carter said, that "the economy

What Arms Control?

Presidents deserve wide latitude in appointing officials to carry out their policies. Therefore, in appraising the appointment of Kenneth Adelman to bead the arms control agency the Senate ought not so much beat up an obvi-ously unprepared nominee as learn whether this casual designation fairly defines President Reagan's approach to the issue.

Mr. Reagan began by trying to overturn the arms control policies of the previous five presidents. His aim was rearmament first, in quest of an elusive nuclear superiority, and only then negotiations, in which the Russians would beg for relief from a costly race.

The president did finally propose deep reductions in both intercontinental and European nuclear arms. But the proposals, seeking much more Soviet sacrifice than American, were more for public relations than negotia-tions, much like Monday's call for a summit.

Mr. Reagan's first arms control appointees fit this strategy. So, apparently, is Mr Adelman, whose main credential for replacing Eugene Rostow is that he, too, supported the strategy as a member of the Committee on the Present Danger. Most of Mr. Adelman's diplomatic experience has dealt with Africa and the United Nations, not weaponry.

Still, the president nowadays sometimes sounds as if he is changing strategy. Mr. Rostow, in departing, Paul Nitze, one of his top negotiators, and all the European allies have vigorously urged a compromise at least on Euromissiles — a balanced limitation to replace the unattainable goal of a total ban.

If a negotiable policy is now also President Reagan's aim, be must know that diplomacy cannot rest with making better proposals. Weapons restraint also requires complex definitions and arrangements for verification — whose negotiation can be easily sabotaged by an unwilling bureaucracy.

A president dedicated to arms control would look to the arms control agency to give him the best advice on how to reach consensus in Washington and agreement with Moscow. Even when well staffed, that agency carries only modest weight in interagency battles. Mr. Reagan hardly needs more ideological theorists or reinforcements for a Pentagon transfixed by the Soviet threat.

Mr. Adelman's appointment, in sum, is the occasion for some probing skepticism - not so much to deny him a job as to test the underlying policy of the president. The Senate might inquire not only into Euromissiles but also into the larger strategic issues of arms control and a test ban, space weapons and nonproliferation. If even at this late hour the administration is really content with the nominee's modest credentials, then it still does not care enough about arms control or has still not learned enough about bow to attain it.

West African Refugees

It is clear enough what force is currently pro-pelling bundreds of thousands of desperate West African refugees ont of Nigeria. In better days Nigeria's expanding oil-based economy drew workers across its traditionally porous borders from Ghana, Togo, Benin and other nearby countries with little official heed being paid. But in current conditions of falling oil prices and global recession, and with elections possibly coming up soon, the Nigerians see them not as useful and welcome but as a burden and a source of internal strain. Two weeks ago the government in Lagos abruptly ordered out all illegal aliens; there may be a million or two or more. They are departing in pell-mell and pathetic fashion now. No one questions Nigeria's right to remove undocumented aliens; the United States ousts people in this class every day. What is hard to understand is why the Nigerian government would have acted so suddenly, without giving without consulting the neighboring states which, notwithstanding the distress of their own that led their citizens to leave home in the first place, are expected to take them back without a moment's pause. It is quite true that on occasion Nigerians living elsewhere in Afri-ca have been rudely ousted. Still, the manner of the ouster of the current unfortunates seems inconsistent with the relaxed and compas-sionate attitude that Africans have often shown to the movement of fellow Africans back and forth across national lines,

Legitimate political refugees, the Nigerians say, will not be involuntarily repatriated. But a great many other people will be in urgent need, Relatives will take in some. Others will have to be cared for by the international relief agencies, whose purpose it is to buffer the great shocks that continually convulse nations. —THE WASHINGTON POST.

A View of the Bush Trip

Jimmy Carter used his vice president, Walter Mondale, as a close and trusted policy adviser.
Ronald Reagan uses George Bush quite differently, as a constantly perambulating public relations officer. Old George, whose long career in politics contains many floating store in inin politics contains many fleeting stops in im-portant-sounding appointed jobs but precious examples of election to anyth he has always been: an eager and loyal team player, excluded from the inner caucus around the president because he is not one of them, not one of the true believers. So when Mr. Bush is asked by the president to spend 12 days in Europe touring troubled NATO capitals. Washington itself has no doubt what be is going for. He is going to spread a little oil on choppy waters. His personal conclusions, reporting back, will carry scant weight if Judge Clark or Ed Meese distike them. There is, in short, no substance to the trip.

It is not a lack of advertisements or promotional tours that is causing so many heartaches in public opinion in Europe and for that matter in the United States. It is a feeling that we are losing the argument [with Yuri Andropov] because our argument itself is not very good. That accelerated when Ronald Reagan captured the White House and gathered around him a team of ideological zealots which, at least in the beginning, set rearmament square-ly above disarmament. It speeds a few miles faster with every blank reiteration of the zero option and every fresh appointment [like that of Kenneth Adelman to head arms control) which carries zero expertise and thus zero conviction. The problem is not Mr. Andropov: he merely highlights the problem. The problem is European distrust of an American leadership manifestly lacking command of detail and coherence; and general distrust, at the refined level where policies are actually formed, of the case that is being argued.

A Beijing View of Geneva

The Geneva talks reflect the continuing contention between the superpowers, each trying to curb the other and develop its own nuclear power. Neither seems to be willing to lose any of the nuclear capability it has built up. But, beset with internal difficulties economically and politically, they are afraid of a head-on clash and a direct war. Both need negotiations. But negotiations must inevitably be long and drawn out, and are not likely to be fourful. drawn-out, and are not likely to be fruinful.

Japan and the Soviet Union

- The China Daily (Beijing).

Probably the most salient change having taken place in 1982 in defense affairs was the coming to office of a defense-minded prime minister, Yasuhiro Nakasone. In the Diet he replied to questions in a manner almost defiant of the deep-rooted apathy and inertia among opposition parties toward improve-ment of the nation's defense capability.

In the Asia-Pacific region the Soviet Union presents Japan and its allies with a double challenge. On the one hand we are confronted with the reality of a constant buildup in Soviet strategic, theater and conventional forces deployed in the Far East. On the other, the Soviet government is serious in seeking a reconcili-ation of some kind with Beijing, and it would hardly be surprising — except perhaps for Hanoi — if Moscow now wanted less tension and use of force in Indochina. How to respond to the new political offensive by the Soviet Union remains a major foreign policy ques-tion for the Nakasone cabinet.

The Japan Times Weekly (Tokyo).

Newspeak in Argentina

What a strange inversion of reasoning. On April 2 last year Argentina decided to resolve by force the question of possession of the Falklands. At no time then did Argentina seek to use good sense to avoid useless sacrifices. What right does it now have to criticize the "language of force" — supposing that this were, in fact, the best characterization of the recent visit to the islands by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher? The Argentine regime has used up its full quota of credibility. It should, thus, if only for modesty's sake, refrain from digging up the aggressive passions that led multitudes to the Plaza de Mayo and that now turn against the government.

Brzezinski: For Partnership with Europe and China Washington – Vice President George Bush and Secretary of State George ultz have their work cut out for them. By Zhigmieus P.—— By Z

WASHINGTON — Vice President George
Bush and Secretary of State George
Shultz have their work cut out for them.
Mr. Bush will have to convincingly demonstrate to the Europeans that America does have a sense of direction on strategic and arms con-trol matters, that it has a constructive and longterm program for dealing with the deeper causes of East-West instability in Central Europe and that it is prepared to move forward with genuine political will in its quest for a Middle Eastern peace settlement — something of direct significance to the West Europeans.

Mr. Shultz needs to engage the Chinese in a serious strategic dialogue on the state of the American-Soviet-Chinese relationship. China should be treated as a genuine global partner, not merely as a bilateral squabbler over secondary issues such as textiles or even Taiwan. If the American-Chinese relationship narrows only to a diplomatic connection, these divisive issues become of paramount importance. But if the relationship is broadened, secondary disreements can be subsumed in a larger pattern of strategic-political conperation.

It is difficult to demand that the Europeans deploy intermediate-range nuclear forces while the Reagan administration waffles and mis-manages the MX issue. Just as European will-ingness to deploy U.S. missiles has become a limus test of allegiance to the alliance and of willingness to shoulder the burdens of collective responsibility, so MX deployment has be-

This is the second of two articles. come a test of American willingness to face up come a test of American willingness to face up to the realities of the longer-term implications of the Soviet strategic challenge. Mr. Bush should be prepared to say that President Reagan will put his prestige on the line in favor of a mode of MX deployment to be recommended to him in the foreseeable future.

The Europeans should be informed that the administration is prepared to move expedi-tiously with arms control initiatives. For good tactical bargaining reasons, it would be premature for it to give up its commitment to the "zero option." But there is no reason why Mr. Bush could not indicate that in return for Soviet acceptance of the zero option as the eventual goal of progressive arms control arrangements, the administration would in return be prepared to implement that objective by stages which in the meantime maintain relative symmetry be-tween Soviet deployments targeted on Europe and an alliance response.

The public posture of the United States in Europe would be much better if the reported formula of negotiator Paul H. Nitze for an interim missile settlement — 75 on each side were seen as rejected by Moscow while being sympathetically considered by Washington.

The Soviet Union's economic crisis, matched by Eastern Europe's economic stagnation, is likely to make the Polish political crisis an en-during one. Mr. Bush should be prepared to say that America sees a major danger and a significant opportunity in the continuing Polish tragedy. A political eruption in Poland would probably precipitate Soviet intervention, with calamitous consequences for all parties concerned. Western sanctions are justified as an initial response to the brutality inflicted upon Poland, but a longer-term strategy must have both negative and positive sides.

Europeans would be both more impressed and more supportive of American efforts if Mr. Bush could inform them that Mr. Reagan has appointed a high-level interagency task force, headed by someone of established expertise and reputation, to develop jointly with West European friends a longer-term economic package for Poland, possibly subject to IMF supervision, in the event that Moscow and Warsaw should opt for national reconciliation and political relaxation. Such a concrete step would help convince the West Europeans that U.S. policy on Poland is not motivated merely by tactical animus and designed to maximize East European and Soviet difficulties, but is also part of a longer-range strategy aimed at eventually shaping a more constructive East-We framework in Central Europe.

In China Mr. Shaltz should provide and implement some of the strategic undu standings developed in the latter stages of the Carter administration and reinforced in Ale ander Haig's first discussion with Beijing, i cluding the willingness to provide some of defensive weapons systems.

After an OPEC meeting in Geneva that the Saudi oil minister, Ahmed Zaki Yamani, called "a complete failure," many people are worrying about the consequences of a fall in oil prices. problems would worsen if revenues from the windfall profits tax on oil diminished.

True, the surge in oil prices in 1979 and 1980 was the principal cause of the current world economic slump. But a sudden collapse world economic stump. But a sudden conapse in prices — might undermine economic recovery instead of stimulating it.

Not that a sudden drop has happened yet. What we have is only the latest episode in a year-long saga, or soap opera, played out by OPEC members as they try to cope with the new realities of the world oil market.

They have absorbed the energy component of the world slump; that is, they have borne the entire burden of the fall in world oil consumption caused by recession, as well as by conservation and fuel-switching. According to information from World Energy Industry, a data service, OPEC's share of oil production (outside the communist world) has fallen from 65 percent in 1973 and 62 percent in 1979 to 48 percent in 1982.

The economic slump puts additional pres-sure on the oil market, and the aim at OPEC's Geneva meeting was a trade-off: The Saudis would agree to a further cut in their output in exchange for greater price cohesion and discipline by other members.

Other issues make compromise more difficult. One is a structural problem: the growth of oil production outside OPEC, particularly in Mexico and the North Sea. Those producers are happy to find shelter at the edge of the OPEC price umbrella, but they do not share in production cutbacks.

The other problem is Iran, very much a rogue in OPEC and keen to reduce Saudi power. The Saudis and their Arab neighbors recognize that higher Iranian production means more revenue to support Iran's war with Iraq. But they do not want Iran to feel so shortchanged by cutback decisions that it will lasb out blindly at its OPEC partners.

No one can be sure how the oil market will respond if OPEC fails to work things out. A reasonable guess at this point is that prices would settle $2 to $3 below the hitherto level of $33-$34 a barrel. That would burt most producers in the short term, but serve longterm OPEC interests by stilling efforts to develop alternatives to OPEC oil.

A good deal less likely, unless the slump persists for a very long time, is the ment to the Los Angeles Times.

'deep-drop" scenario in which oil prices sink to $25 a barrel or below.

It has been argued that this would be a owerful stimulant to economic recovery, but that case is not clear. For here we enter what seems a paradox. While the sharp rise in oil prices was a driving force behind the current slump, many of its effects were indirect, resulting from many of the sharp rise in oil prices. sulting from monetary policies meant to check oil inflation. By itself, a swift drop . would probably be a weak stimulus.

And consider what else it might bring:

widespread bankruptcies in the energy sector and further weakening of many banks in an already fragile financial system. Such an environment would not fill consumers with the confidence to spend, or imbue businesses with the confidence to invest. People would

If prices did-begin to drop sharply the Reagan administration would probably slap a tariff on imported oil to protect domestic investments and raise revenues. That would transfer revenues from OPEC governments to the U.S. government. And that is one of the reasons why OPEC members, having lost many illusions and now staring into the abyss trying to gauge its depth, are likely to meet again soon to continue their efforts to muddle through. This soon makes through. This soap opera is going to run for at least another year.

RAZ. Austria — It is useful to come here, to Austria's second largest city. Its burghers provide a lesson in human survival. It is a reminder of the fragility of human memory. It offers evidence of the way in which war inclines those lucky enough to survive to live a life of resignation and willful amnesia.

Nestled in the mountains of Styria close to Yugoslavia, Graz seems scarcely touched by the economic squalls that buffet Europe, Protected by a generous infusion of Arab petrodollors, the Austria of Bruno Kreisky is weathering winter with remarkable nonchalance. The unemployment rate is among the lowest in Europe; inflation is almost unknown.

Life proceeds unblemished by the war of words being waged in the East and the West. The citizens of Graz seem oblivious to the politicians who debate their fate in foreign capitals. People in coffeehouses are less likely to talk about missiles than about the incompetence of the Yugoslav conductor of the opera, whose orchestra is said to be unhappy almost to the point of open rebellion.

Since Graz has the largest surviving Renaissance and post-Renaissance core in German-speaking Europe, it is picturesque. The beauty of its buildings conceals the borror of much of its history. There were plague, locusis, the Turks, Hitler. This last is not much talked about.

The fact that 80 percent of the population enthusiastically backed Hitler, that 70 percent of the city's civil servants were secret Nazis before the Anschluss of 45 years ago, is not mentioned in any of the guide books so proudly stacked in the windows of Graz's numerous bookstores.

Nor, of course, is the fact of the mass murder of all the 1,720 of the city's Jews noted. Little is left to record the presence of a commun that had thrived since the Middle Ages: a single tombstone enscribed in Hebrew is stuck ignominiously in the wall of a government building, only partially visible from an inner lyard now used as a parking lot. Alfred Polgar, the Austrian essay-ist, once said this: "The Germans are first-class Nazis but lousy anti-Semiles. The Austrians are lousy Nazis, but God what first-class anti-Semites!" Official policy repudiates this heritage. A museum was opened in the fall on the site of the Maythausen concentration camp 95 miles north of Graz, to commemorate those who were killed there. But this guilt does not seem to go very deep. ### Clashes Reported After Vietnamese Take Rebel Camp

BANGKOK — Scattered fight-ing broke out Tuesday near the Thai-Cambodian border around.a refugee camp that was seized Monday by Vietnamese forces in the heaviest assault of the current dryseason, according to reports reaching Bangkok.

Western relief workers said up to 25,000 Cambodian refugees had been allowed to camp inside the Thai border following heavy fight-ing Monday that forced them to flee the Nong Chan camp. Until the Vietnamese attack, in which about 100 persons were reportedly wounded, Nong Chan had been a stronghold of rebels fighting the Vietnamese presence in Cambodia.

Military sources at the border re-ported scattered light-arms fire around the camp early Tuesday. But artillery and mortar fire resumed in the afternoon. Witnesses said Vietnamese troops occupying Nong Chan halted their advance a little more than a mile from the Cambodian-Thai border.

One Ghanaian Drowned in Rush To Board Ships Leaving Nigeria

LAGOS — At least one person was drowned in a frantic struggle by thousands of Ghanaians to board two ships sent to take them home after their expulsion from Nigeria, shipping officials said

The ships arrived Monday night from Accra, the capital of Ghana, just before Nigeria's deadline for the departure of two million illegal aliens, balf of them Ghanaians, ex-pured at midnight.

The vessels left Tuesday morning, leaving behind at least 4,000 Ghanaians who said they had no money to pay for food or for the journey home by road.

Although the officials said they could confirm only the death of one woman, who fell into the harbor during the scramble to board the ships, Accra radio, monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp., said that several people had been drowned in the rush.

The Lagos shipping officials said the mooring ropes from the ships had hardly been fastened before people began to scramble up them. The departure of the second ves-sel was delayed for hours as officials pleaded with several hundred passengers to disembark because the ship was dangerously overloaded for the 15-hour trip to Accra.

One Ghanaian, who fought unsuccessfully to board the ship, said he had seen baggage being tossed into the harbor. But he said he did iot know whether it was done to lighten the load or to persuade people to return to the dock.

Those left behind said they would remain at the port and wait for the ships to return. They said sanitary conditions at the docks had improved with fewer people there and that the price of food, which had skyrocketed, had come

By Henry A. Kissinger

NEW YORK — Chinese-American relations have been on a roller coaster for the past generation. In World War II and its immediate aftermath. America somewhat sentimentally tried to promote a weak China, toro by civil war, to great-power status. Then, with the Chinese revolution and the Korean war, came a swing to the other extreme of seemingly perma-nent hostility, with contact between the two countries, for all intents and purposes, broken

When a rapprochement finally took place in the early 1970s, many Americans fell prey to our nostalgic national habit of equating relations among states with relations among people and endowed it with qualities of personal

In the nature of things, this raised exaggerat-ed expectations that could not be fulfilled. Almost inevitably, strains have developed. To some extent occasional squabbles are a sign of maturation, of a normal relationship between countries. Still, the tensions in recent years have gained their own momentum, threatening to damage the important common long-term objectives of both countries.

It is to reverse this process that Secretary of State George P. Shultz has set out on his journey to China

Timing of Textile Issue

Conventional wisdom bas it that the current difficulties are largely due to the clumsiness of the Reagan administration. To be sure, some of the exuberant early statements on Taiwan will not be landmarks in the annals of diplomatic finesse, and the unpropitions timing of the textile issue just prior to the Shultz visit makes one wonder about the coordinating mechanism in our government.

And it took two to make the textile issue intraetable. The causes of the strains in Washington-Beijing relations go deeper: they antedate the Reagan administration; they have been exament and domestic conflicts.

These strains originate, indeed, in the two positive initiatives.

The new links between China and America countries' differing approaches to foreign policy. During the early period of renewed contacts. if rapprochement fulfilled a deep emotional necessity on both sides.

The facts were far more prosaic. China, in its marvelous history of 3,000 years, has never had the experience of dealing with other societies on the basis of equality. It has felt most comfortable when able to be aloof, self-contained, as a culture whose uniqueness placed it beyond the reach of outsiders. For China there was nothing at all unnatural about living apart from America. Nor can it be said that in 1971 there was a ground swell of grass-roots demand in the United States for an opening to China.

There were inevitable differences in tactical perspective. In the developing world, Beijing of-ten retied on competing with Moscow in appealing to radical movements, which led it to back some leaders and causes that were hardly America's favorites. Also, China was leery of Washington's relations with Moscow, explicitly fearful that détente would undermine the West's willingness to stand up to the Soviet Union, implicitly suspicious that it might lead to a U.S.-Soviet arrangement at China's expense.

These differences were downgraded early on because each side bad an interest in rapid and What brought the two nations together was visible progress - the United States to demonnot sentiment but awareness of a common strate its new options amid the frustrations of threat. heart of the problem. The United States always had a difficult passage to navigate: If Washington grew too exub-erant about détente, we would disquiet Beijing and stampede it into its own overtures to Moscow to avoid being left at the gate. If we were tempted to flaunt opposition to us on bilateral issues or in some areas of the world without fear of being left alone with the Soviet Union.

The Carter administration oscillated between both extremes. The wing backed by Cyrus R. Zbig-niew Brzezinski, spoke of a "China card" as if Beijing were a weapon in our arsenal. But a card can be discarded as well as played; the unintended consequence was the unnerving inference that, for the right price from Moscow, we might loosen our ties with Beijing. The Reagan administration suffered from no such ambivalence. Its anti-Soviet pronouncements seemed to freeze us into a rigid hostility toward the Soviet Union, which freed China to adopt, at little risk, a militant Third World possame time, some members of the new administration expressed philosophic convictions very Whatever the cause, U.S.-Chinese relations are less good than they should be, given the enduring parallel interests of the two countries in maintaining the global balance of power.

A stock-taking on both sides is overdue.

The real story of Secretary Shultz's visit to China will not be the familiar issues, such as Taiwan, trade and normalization. At stake will be something intangible: the way the United States and China view their respective roles on world affairs and, above all, whether these views can be harmonized. And this trip is of enormous importance. It is crucial, above all, to be elear about what cannot be accomplished and should not be attempted.

The Shultz visit cannot finally resolve the Taiwan issues. In the Shanghai communiqué of 1972, the accord on normalization of 1979 and even more explicitly in the communique of 1982, the United States has repeatedly committed itself to the proposition that there is only one China and that it would not support any variety of a two-China solution.

Moreover, the United States has already rec-

The future of Taiwan must now be left to historical processes, and for the Chinese on both sides of the Taiwan Strait to work out in their own subtle ways as Chinese leaders them-selves have affirmed. What remains for both sides is to live up to the letter and spirit of existing undertakings. The secretary will surely hear Chinese views as to what that spirit entails. But too intransigent. Beijing might take our coun-terbalancing of Moscow for granted and be formal diplomacy has exhausted the subject: the legal framework cannot be stretched further.

Nor would the subject of trade by itself warrant a trip to Beijing by the secretary of state. To be sure, trade and technology will become increasingly important to China. (The speed of Both sides bave real complaints: Our tactics in the recent textile negotiations have been execrable. Chinese hureaucracy can be maddening for American investors and companies to deal with. We have been too slow in fulfilling promises on technology transfer. The Chinese have changed their economic plan repeatedly in recent years.

But at the heart of these issues — and the reason they fester — is the inadequate political priority that U.S.-Chinese relations have received from both sides. Neither country can ture of "a plague on both your houses." At the want to - nor afford to - win these battles. Both have a stake in overcoming bureaucratic inertia and suspiciousness. genuinely neuralgic for the Chinese—has, nevertheless, been pursued with extraordinary stridency, even after the Reagan administration had gone out of its way to symplectic the priori way that makes Moscow the arbiter of both European-American and Chinese-American re-lationships. Each side's freedom of action is in the end restricted by a set of truths that each ignores at its peril:

hegemony — for that would shift the global baiance of resources and power irreversibly to Moscow's advantage. A threat to the security of China would undermine the global equilibrium as surely as Soviet domination of Europe. And a weakening of America would jeopardize the security of China. Statesmen can make use of these facts; they cannot uninvent them.

Second, China realizes - even when it does not avow - that its frontier of more than 4,000 china. miles (6,400 kilometers) with the Soviet Union is its fundamental security problem. As China to avoid conflict — for example, in Korea, modernizes, it turns into a potential long-range danger for Moscow, if only because it will be text of a shared interest in avoidance of war in danger for Moscow, if only because it will be ess and less subject to intimidation.

Beijing knows very well, moveover, that it is being wooed because the United States is in play: in our absence it might be threatened. Just as the United States - if it is rational - cannot push U.S.-Soviet detente to the point of endangering Chinese security, so China, if it is faron the whole American and Chinese interests sighted cannot wish to forfeit America's vital run parallel. interest in its security and territorial integrity.

Still, reality is not self-implementing. In America, each new administration proudly proclaims the failure of its predecessor and its determination to start afresh - oblivious to the fact that this must unsettle all leaders who have staked their country's fate on the previous dispensation. The Chinese approach is patient and aloof; the Middle Kingdom has a horror of appearing as a supplicant.

Washington acts as if good faith and bonbomie supply the lubricant of international relations. Beijing assumes that its interlocutor has done his homework and will understand subtle indirections; the Chinese approach can, therefore, appear impersonal, even condescending, To the Chinese. Americans often appear unstable and slightly frivolous. To Americans, Chinese occasionally present themselves as either inscrutable or uncommunicative.

Thus, both countries need to understand each other's psychology better and to establish the confidence that this understanding will last. We have to face the fact that the Chinese have deeven emotional stability. At one point we eemed to invite military cooperation and then backed away. We promised cooperation on transfer of technology and in effect reneged. All this raised doubts whether we were really

Technology an Urgent Topic

Of the operational matters, the only issue requiring urgent attention is transfer of technology. Our restrictions on trade with Communist countries have as their purpose to prevent the strengthening of strategic capabilities hostile to

But China is decidedly not a Soviet ally, non is it in the same class of military power. China could not represent a military threat to American interests for the rest of this century, by which time current technology will be supersedstatus for technological transfer as India and Yugoslavia. It would convey that we understand, and take seriously, the strategic parallelism of interest.

In my experience, the best approach in discussions with Chinese leaders is complete frankness. It is wiser to admit that some positions are in a state of evolution than to pretend to settled views that dialogue will reveal as shallow or empty. It would help if — as the dialogue devel veloped serious doubts about our political or ops — the American positions could be given as much of a bipartisan cast as possible.

Samoans: Gentle and Peaceful? A Scientist Differs

Study Challenges Mead's Book on Islanders and Could Stir 'Nature vs. Nurture' Debate

By Edwin McDowell

New York Times Service New York — Two months before its official publication date, a book maintaining that the late anthropologist Margaret Mead seriously misrepresented the culture and character of Samoa has ignited heated discussion within the behavioral sciences.

The book is entitled "Margaret Mead and Samoa: The Making and Unmaking of an Anthropological Myth." by Derek Freeman, professor emeritus of anthropology at the Australian National University in Canberra.

On the surface, the book, to be published in April by Harvard University Press, is a critical analysis of Miss Mead's book, "Coming of Age in Samoa," the best-selling work of anthropology that on its publication in 1928 established her national reputation.

"On that level, Freeman's book is an extremely important piece of work," said Robert C. Hunt, chairman of the department of anthropology at Brandeis University, who evaluated the book for Harvard University Press. Beneath the surface, Mr. Freeman's book could intensify the often bitterly contested "nurture-versus-nature" controversy, the argument over whether human beings are shaped mainly by environment or by heredity. Moreover, the book raises important questions about scholarship and ideological commitment. Miss Mead described the Samoan people as genule, peaceful, free of religious conflicts and devoid of jealousy. They condoned adolescent free love, she said, and as a result, adolescence in Samoa was without the turmoil or stress that accompanies adolescence in the United States and elsewhere, demonstrating, she said, that adolescent behavior had to be explained in purely cultural terms.

By contrast, Mr. Freeman asserts that:

Few other scholars would go that far, but many are convinced that Mr. Freeman, a New Zealander with a doctorate from Cambridge University, has written an important book. Ernst Mayr, professor emeritus of zoology at Harvard, and a leading behavioral scientist, said Samoan children, adolescents and adults the book "is not only a contribution to cultural"

Nikolaas Tinbergen, the behavioral scientist who won the 1973 Nobel Prize for medicine, said the Freeman book is "a masterpiece of modern scientific anthropology."

Defenders of Miss Mead say that many schol-ars who bave lined up behind Mr. Freeman are and credence within the academic community Mr. Freeman says that both nature and nur-

That aside, however, Mr. Freeman said that his book is not so much intended to address that longtime academic dispute as to rectify the wrong that has been done to Samoan society.

One of the Freeman book's admirers is Le Tagaloa Leota Pita, dean of development at the University of Samoa, who said that although the book does not tell the Samoans anything new about themselves, "for the first time an would write and describes the reality of his living culture."
That reality, according to Mr. Freeman, who has spent a total of six years in Samoa since 1940, is wholly at variance with the idyllic picture conveyed by Miss Mead in her book and in subsequent writings about Samoa.

'Miss Mead's Errors'

The author attributes many of Miss Mead's "errors" to her unfamiliarity with the language, her absence of systematic prior investigation of the society and its values, and to her choosing to live with expatriate Americans rather than in Samoan household. He writes that Miss probably the result of the young anthropologist being deliberately misled by her adolescent informants, who wanted to tease her.

His major allegation, bowever, is that Miss Mead's professional shortcomings derived from her doctrinal baggage.

There is the clearest evidence, he writes, that "it was her deeply convinced belief in the doctrine of extreme cultural determinism, for which she was prepared to fight with the whole battery at her command, that led her to construct an account of Samoa that appeared to substantiate this very doctrine."

"I think Margaret may have gone to Samoa with a cultural bias," said Theodore Schwartz, professor of anthropology at the Univesity of California, San Diego. "She always had a theme; she addressed current preoccupations and brought back from the field something that would reverberate in society. And I don't doubt that Margaret knew very little of the language and didn't have the total immersion one would

Mr. Schwartz who was a field assistant for Miss Mead in New Guinea in the 1950s, has not read the Freeman book. But he said that even if Miss Mead made errors in Samoa. "I would find it hard to believe that she was 180 degrees

Miss Mead was a curator at the American Museum of Natural History for more than 50 years. David Hurst Thomas, chairman of the museum's department of anthropology, said:
"It would bother me if aspersions were cast on her integrity or honesty, but it doesn't bother me that her research findings may have been superseded. I am an archaeologist, and we learn that dealing with a culture 10,000 years old in 1983, it is not the same 10,000-year-old culture studied in 1923. It doesn't mean that the research is any less valid."

Several of Mr. Freeman's professional colleagues note that his own personality has com-plicated the dispute. For example, Mr. Washburn, a former chairman of the anthropology department at the University of California, Berkeley, said: "He is, unfortunately, a difficult person and he's using this anti-Mead data to attack Boas." (Miss Mead's late mentor, Boas, was the intellectual leader of American anthropology. He wrote the foreword to "Coming of Age in Samca.")

"People who work on Samoa know Margaret Mead was wrong, and Freeman's book shows that beyond doubt," said Bradd Shore, professor of anthropology at Emory University and author of the recent book, "Salailua: A Samoan Mystery" (Columbia University Press). "But if she suppressed the dark elements. Freeman painted all those dark elements in his book. She generated a myth out of opposition to eugenics, he generated a distorted picture out of opposi-tion to Margaret Mead. But on the whole, his

Mr. Freeman acknowledges his unpopularity within the profession, but he attributes much of it to the hostility of colleagues who resent the mere suggestion that anyone would take issue with a virtual "goddess of anthropology," whom be describes as "a very remarkable woman of quite considerable achievement."

When he decided to return to Samon in 1965, be said. "I was refused research funds by my own department head on grounds that I shouldn't try to go against Margaret Mead." Moreover, be asserts in his book that so domi-nant were Miss Mead's position and reputation that anthropologists who subsequently went to Samoa and found errors in her research not only did not question her findings but, because of the prevailing intellectual climate, actually praised their "remarkably high" reliability.

You could write a book on either subject," he said, "without more than a paragraph or two referring to the other. His position on Margaret Mead is an attempt at intellectual history, to put into context events in academe. If that is controversial, it will be controversial not as a question of faith but of accuracy and interpretauon. His position on nature-nurture amounts to a matter of faith. That he has put the two together will confuse the interpretation of both, but it's his book."

Mr. Washburn said that few anthropologists under 50 will be bothered by the Freeman book, because their theories are built on data in addition to Miss Mead's, but many older scholars detta. His book is a necessary corrective, be will be upset because "her book said what liber-

BUENOS AIRES — An Argentine brand of rock 'o' roll has upstaged the country's mournful tango as the theme tune of its postwar Falklands war with Britain, has become a mass phenomenon after being shunned by the tightly controlled media for years.

"Before the war young people apparently didn't exist, but then the war came and they had to be recognized because it was young people who fought and died. And when they were recognized, everything they had surfaced, including rock 'n' roll," said the country's best-known rock star.

Charry Carcia.

Radio disc jockeys, obliged by the war to climinate English lyrics from programs, resorted to Spanish-language rock and converted into overnight celebrities singers formerly branded as long-haired subversives.

The new idols of the young are all seasoned musicians in their 30s.

Garcia, 31, is their first superstar.

A Christmas concert which drew 30,000 fans was given two hours on Jan. 1 by state-controlled television.

García, in a parody of the superstar image, drove to the stage — a 30-meter-high (100-foot) replica of Buenos Aires — in a pink Cadillac limousine, wearing a pink suit and spectacles.

The crowd danced wildly as he sang: "The gurkhas keep on advancing, the old cronies babble on TV, the leaders of the kids are drinking whisky gitally, took only 17 hours to with the rich, while the sparks fly in the plaza, where the workers mass

Rockets launched from behind the stage bombarded the fake, smoke-shrouded buildings to the sound of sirens and machine guns.

TRIESTE, Italy — Though there have been several attempts at a full-scale Meyerbeer revival, the operas of the 19th-century German composer, so widely popular in his own day, seem incapable of ro-entering the standard repertory. Covent Garden staged a grand pro-duction of "L'Africaine" a few seasons ago, the Metropolitan mount-. ed "Le Prophète," and two decades ago La Scala put on a super-staging of "Les Huguenots" with Joan Sutherland and Giulietta Simionato. But apart from some pirate re-

New Firm to Take Advantage Of Growth in Asian Market

In a bid to take part in the growth of Asia and the global expansion of financial markets, a Kawaiti company has joined together with one from Hong Kong and another from the United States to form Asian Oceanic Holdings Ltd., with Richard M. Bliss as chairman and chief executive.

Mr. Bliss said the company will offer a wide combination of financial, management and business development services to companies in East and Southeast Asia from its headquarters in Singapore and Hong Kong. Asian Oceanic is 40 percent by Oceanic Finance Co. Ltd. of Hong Kong and 20 percent by Kuwait Foreign Contracting and Investment Co.

"The Asian area is going to continue to grow and prosper, we're going to see a number of new businesses and companies; and there will be a real role for a group of professionals working with these companies." Mr.

Bliss said. "As they prosper, we hope to prosper."

Mr. Bliss said Asian Oceanic also hoped to serve as a principal channel between its clients and financial institutions in Europe, North America and Western Asia.

Remains Key U.K. Problem By Barnaby J. Feder

Unemployment

LONDON - One year ago, when it was announced that British unemployment had sur-passed three million, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher had to struggle to make herself heard over shouts of "shame" and "resign" in the House of Commons.

The anniversary passed unmarked this week. The business community's concern focused instead on the current news about the shaky pound and falling oil prices.

But Mrs. Thatcher and her Conservative Par-ty must call an election before May 1984, and neither she nor her political opposition is likely to lorger that polls consistently conclude that most British voters view unemployment as the single most important indicator of the nation's economic situation. By that standard, the nation is in deeper trouble than ever.

"There's a lot of pessimism on the employ-ment outlook," said Richard Worsley, director of social affairs for the Confederation of British Industry. "There's nobody who sees a major reduction in unemployment in the next year to 18

Unemployment has grown steadily, albeit at a slower rate, in the past year. In December, it rose in all 11 regions of the nation, from the relatively prosperous southeast, where it stood percent, to Northern Ireland, where it passed 20 percent.

The figures also highlight the increasingly troublesome split between the economic for-times of northern and southern Britain. Bolstered by London's service-oriented economy and the growth of electronics companies, the four southern and eastern regions have unem-ployment rates of under 12 percent; the minimum in the northern industry-oriented areas is 14.5 percent.

Fortunately, unemployment is not the whole story. In Britain, as in the United States, unemployment figures generally begin to improve many months after an economy has begin to rebound: They are lagging indicators, in the parlance of economists, and other statistics are

Job vacancies have been rising in recent months and productivity, increased by the shutdown of inefficient plants, has grown at a rapid rate. Retail sales have been strong, giving pro-ducers of consumer products hope that the re-cession is ending for them. And last Thursday, the government reported that the nation's bal-ance of trade surplus, helped by North Sea oil exports, had grown for the fourth straight month as errorts surpressed the 55-billion mark month as exports surpassed the £5-billion mark ($7.68 billion) for the first time. # European Firms Hold Grundig Talks

By Axel Krause

International Herald Tribune DAVOS, Switzerland - Four leading West European electronics companies met in Munich Tuesday in a renewed effort to resolve the problems surrounding the pro-posed takeover of Grundig, West Germany's largest consumer electronics company, by France's na-tionalized Thomson Brandt, company sources said.

Participating in the talks, called at the initiative of Anton Jaumann, Bavaria's economics minister, were senior executives from West Germany's Siemens and Bosch groups, from Philips of the Netherlands and from Thomson. Thomson's agreement to acquire 75.5 percent of Grundig -(or. 800 million Deutsche marks ($328 million) has run into suff resistance from German business and labor interest.

Boeing Will Cease Production Of 727, All-Time Best-Seller

SEATTLE (AP) - Beeing will cease production next year of its Boeing 27, the best-selling commercial sucraft of all time, the company said.

Boeing's chairman, T. Wilson, said Monday that production will end after the 1,832d 777 is completed. Company spokesman Tom Cole said.

"The 727 is the biggest selling commercial plane of any type by far, by real far." The second is the McDonnell-Douglas DC-9, of which about 200 have been among borrowers.

1,200 have been produced, he said.

Mr. Wilson said he thinks Boeing's new 757 and 767 models will even wir. Wilson said he thinks Boeing's new 757 and 767 models will even-tually sell more units than the 727. The 727 was introduced in 1963, its peak sale year was 1968; when 160 were produced. That dropped to 131, by 1980, and was down to just 26 last year. The 727's final customer is of their clients paid by Monday Federal Express, which has ordered 15 727 freighters that will be pro-duced at a rate of about one a month.

GM Recall Ordered Over Pollution

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Environmental Protection Agency or-dered General Motors Tuesday to recall 174,000 automobiles made in 1980 that are violating federal standards for nitrogen oxide emissions.

The Buick and Pontiac cars, all with 4.9 liter engines, average about to be announced within two weeks.

GM said it would make no comment until there is a final accord.

Out in the street, it appears to "all the combatants had become snipers." One walked out of the active battle zone into the normal life mous, ambivalent pleasure.

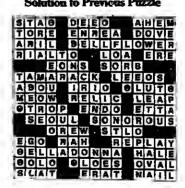

Born has a remarkable style. In through the gradual transition this passage, as Laschen listens to the radio, the sentence rhythms are of Beirui as we used to travel German, died in 1979 at the age of a perfect expression of his exnovel to be translated into English - and very well translated too. If phrases, a never-ending tremolo, the others are as good as this one, we can look forward to them. In Laschen's relations to his wife, Greta, and to his mistress. Ariane, in Lebanon, we find that love and marriage also consist of a series of attacks, retreats, stalemates, treaties, betrayals, ceasefires and dead bodies. Laschen feels that he hasn't learned, or perhaps hasn't the talent, to get along well with "a woman who didn't want to be a merc a man in the dark of a bombshelter opposite." His love for Ariane, he merely because the man is pressing suspects, is something that came too heavily on him. That's what man who has fallen apart, whose mouth takes off, flying through the affairs of the world."

In the war zone of the city, a wrecked car with all its doors open looks more dramatic than the burned corpse at the wheel. A woman whose son and husband have been shot raises her lowered head so that her face surprisingly becomes "a countenance." A soldier asked Laschen to come and see "a family sleeping," and what he means is that they have all died at once, together, in peaceful posi-tions. Outside the buildings, looters from another town have "paid admission" for the privilege of carry-ing off stacks of umbrellas, hair driers, a refrigerator. The faces of the dead had, Laschen notices, "faded, withdrawn, as if at the last moment they had wished to keep something for themselves." Human life here is valuable only as a medi-

"Every justification." Laschen muses, "is now merely tragic and comic." In the shops, the steel shurters are raised only halfway, so that they can be quickly closed, and patrons have to bend double to enter. In the mornings, the war seems unreal, for "nothing can sur-vive such light." Laschen feels detached from it all, separate in his soul. He rationalizes that "his violence was the purer for want of being used." In a flood of practiced rbetoric, a political leader, standing beside his heavily guarded swim-ming pool, says that he speaks "not as the bon vivant I could be, not as the archeologist I'd like to be, nor as the connoisseur of modern sculpture, but rather as a commander and fighter."

While Laschen and Ariane make love in her .partment, a bomb explodes at the end of the garden.
"How unpleasant!" Ariane remarks, having already adjusted her vocabulary to a permanent state of war. To Laschen, she says, "Why can't you drop those rehearsed movements, those twitchings, with-

Redskins' Gibbs on Genius and Success

By Dave Anderson New York Times Service

LOS ANGELES - In his words, the coach of the Super Bowl XVII champion Washington Redskins was "still on a high" Monday morn-ing, "I haven't been to bed." he said. "and I'm enjoying it." When his news conference in the Los Angeles Marriott ballroom ended, Joe Gibbs entered an elevator with a few friends for the ride up to the lobby.

In their midst was another passenger, a middle-aged woman who thought she recognized the face she had seen so often on television during the Redskins' 27-17 victory.

"Oh," she gushed. "Can I have your auto-graph, Coach Shula?"

Gibbs smiled, glanced at his friends and said, "I told you we don't get any respect."

Turning to the woman, he asked her name in order to personalize his autograph. When the woman saw his name, she blushed. "Oh, I'm sorry," she apologized. "I'm so sorry."

Gibbs laughed with the others at his having en mistaken for Don Shula, the Miami Dolphin coach. But in another sense, that's exactly what the boyish-faced Redskin coach had been talking about at his news conference when he was asked about having emerged as the National Football League's latest "genius."

"First of all," he said, "it's embarrassing to me that people might think I think that of myself. I'm just a very average person. I love what I do and I work hard at it."

Two recent "genius" coaches have had that nage go down in flames.

When the San Francisco 49ers, who won Super Bowl XVI last year, didn't even qualify for this strike-shortened season's 16-team postseason tournament. Bill Walsh was so "drained" that he considered concentrating on his role as general manager before agreeing to continue as coach.

Dick Vermell, who guided the Philadelphia Eagles to Super Bowl XV, recently resigned because he was "burned out" as a coach.
"Ten years from oow, if I'm still standing here," Gibbs had said, "then I'll be a success. Our owner, Jack Kent Cooke, told me that gen-ius is the most overused word in the English language."

Al Davis popularized that word in pro football. When he was coaching the Oakland Raiders, the club's owner then, Wayne Valley, enjoyed describing his coach as "the genius."

Davis reveled in the word. So much so that when he later took command of the Raiders as their managing general partner, he once sug-gested that his profile in the club's media guide

As a worksholic, Gibbs might burn out, too. But he understands his occupation. "What gets to a coach is that it's so highly competitive." he

"Some people deal with adversity better than success." Gibbs said. "The first thing is you automatically have trouble getting the players signed. Then you start thinking you're better than what you are. That could kill us more than

Gibbs only hinted at the social temptations of success. With more money and more adula-tion as champions, some NFL players have disappeared into drugs in recent years.

The players have to maintain their weighttraining program, their conditioning program," he said. "Dealing with success, some players can't cope with that. You have to remember you're the same person you were 13 weeks ago. "I think I'd get madder about that than if a player got into trouble — if he started acting

As a strategist, Gibbs will be remembered as the coach who punctured the Dolphins' topranked defensive unit with 400 yards of total offense, including 166 by John Riggins for a Super Bowl rushing record.

"We didn't change our plays, but we used a oumber of formations we'd not used for live weeks," Gibbs said. "Teams take a look at what you do, so you try not to do what you've been ooing. If we change the look each week, we make 'em play our offense from scratch."

Orono Keeps WBC Crown on KO

CARACAS (UPI) — World Boxing Council superflyweight champion Rafael Orono of Venezuela retained his title Monday night with a fourthround round knockout of Panamanian Pedro Romero.

Romero, whose right eyebrow was cut in the second round, was floored twice in the fourth; on the second knockdown, the challenger ailed to beat the count. --The scheduled 12-rounder was Orono's first defense of the title he won Nov. 30 when he defeated Chul Ho Kim of South Korea.

OBSERVER Such Gentle People

By Russell Baker NEW YORK — This is New York:

Fellow parks his car at the curb. Sometimes he parks around the corner, sometimes across the street, sometimes right under your win-

Locks all the doors. Locks the gas cap. Walks away. I don't know where he goes. Parking spots are bard to find in Manhartan, so he probably goes someplace a half-mile, a mile, two miles away. Chances are he'll be gone until 4 o'clock tomorrow morning. Maybe he'll be gone all night, even though the New Jersey plates on his car might make you think he'd have to get back across the river before sunup. Don't let the Jersey tags give you hope, though.

Half the car owners in New York sport Jersey plates. It's another way of beating New York's back-breaking tax structure. So maybe the parker with Jersey tags is headed off to his apartment crosstown for a night's sleep.

If you're an out-of-towner, you're thinking. "The poor dolt! Parking his car on a street in New York like that — there won't be anything left of it when he comes

The reason you think this is that, as an out-of-towner, you have been overstuffed with tales of New York are thinking wrong.

This New York tax swindler with the Jersey plates is not worried about felons getting at his car. No sir. He has equipped his car with an automobile burglar alarm.

burglar alarm is going to let go our windows and stare, or even with an ear-piercing howl that can penetate six thicknesses of brick wall over a three-block radius. Everybody for blocks around is instantly going to know the car is being touched. The thief is going to know, the owner will always revamoose at full speed.

Very clever, you say? Not if you're a New Yorker. If you're a New Yorker, you know it's not clever at all. It's diabolical, Because what happens is that howl, it continues to how even af-ter the thief has left the neighbortained, high-pitched note which cannot only slice through brick walls, but can also drill into the nerve and bone of every residen within range.

Usually this ordeal lasts 20 or 30 minutes, though I experienced one case in which it lasted four hours. After enduring it for an hour, I fled the neighborhood and went to a movie, and it was still howling when I returned.

Often the police come, but since they have no legal authority to break and enter, they can only apologize to the community and leave it to suffer until the owner calls for

In your town - in most towns, I dare say — you would know how to deal with a car that parked under your window and proceeded to carry on for bours like a factory whistle. Perhaps a convention of suffering neighbors, after swearing an oath of silence in case of police inquiries, will commission someone to take an iron bar to the car window, then open the door and rip

Yes, of course it's unjust that 2,000 innocent, law-abiding citizens should suffer torment while the principals in the case - the car owner and the thief — curl up hap-pily in bed, far from the agony for which they are responsible.

And yet, in New York we do not behave badly toward the offending car. In New York, you see, despite what you have heard, we are gentle people. We sit patiently under riv-ers in the darkness of disabled subways and do not riot.

When we are assaulted by how-Anybody touches that car, the ing parked cars we may throw up - no one - would dare seek relief turn, unlock his car, turn off the alarm and smile a thin smile at us,

The more daring among us may essay a slight frown. Nothing more. In a city like this our self-control must be tight. Very tight. So we are gentle. Civilized. Quivering with self-control. So often so close to murder, but always so self-controlled. And gentle.

Ah, For Life as a Country Innkeeper

By Dudley Clendinen

New York Times Service
WARE, Massachusetts
This This is a story of New England country inns, of those who yearn to live the country life, and of one family that made the transition from the suburhan forefront of the U.S. present to the head and the transition of the U.S. present to the head of the American the back roads of the American past. There, they keep an inn, and offer others who have that dream a chance to try it on.

The progression is wonderfully improbable: Margaret Loben-stine's parents left Hitler's Germany in the 1930s. She grew up in Kansas. Geoffrey Lobenstine's family roots were in New England, but his childhood traced the career of his father, a Foreign Service officer.

They met, married had twins, settled in a tiny house with a postage-stamp yard in Berkeley. California. They worked for the Postal Service.

Five years ago, on a trip back east for a family reunion, they took a wrong turn leaving the Massachusetts Turnpike and traveled n winding, wooded road, past signs for a state salmon hatchery, Alvin Rondeau's Dairy Ear, the Knights of Columbus. Palmer Chapter, They came to the Lown of Ware.

"Where?" Mrs. Lobenstine laughs now at the pun that has become a staple for her and her hushand, both 39. "Where?" Ware. In Massachusetts, where culture, charm, and the historic sights are thought to lie on the coast to the east, and in the Berkshires to the west. Ware is nowhere in particular, It is 80 miles west of Boston, off the beaten track, an old mill town of 8,000 souls and one bed-andbreakfast country inn - the Lobenstines' Wildwood Inn.

Like untold numbers of stressed and crowded urban residents. Mrs. Lobenstine had a fantasy. "I always wanted to live in New England ever since I read Little Women, " she said. "I wanted a big bouse in the country with a wraparound porch. And the only way we could have a hig bouse with no money was to run an inn."

They knew nothing of innkeeping, of froning sheets and piumping pillows for strangers, of keeping the coal bin full and the reservation ledger and hank accounts straight, the bavoc that someone else's pet or child can wreak, the importance of hot mulled cider, of nearby restaurants, of sights to see. They knew nothing of the daily test of chemistry between a group of strangers come together one's living roum, or the trick of maintaining some private life in a public bouse.

"I wish I'd had some opportunity to try it out," Mrs. Lobenstine says now.

Now that she knows the life, and the attraction it holds for the untugored, she lets aspiring innkeepers take her place on occasional weekends, to give herself a hreak, and to give them an education before joining the swelling ranks of keepers of country inns.

"The numbers have grown at a staggering rate - we are now in touch with about 300 country inns," said Linda Kennedy, vice president of Globe-Pequot Press, publishers of the Guide to Recommended Country Inns in New England, "I would say that three years ago it was closer to 200 inns that we were checking out."

When the Lobenstines took the wrong turn that led to Ware, they stopped on impulse and called a real estate office. The twins, Lori and Heather, would soon finish sixth grade and face n change in schools, If the Lobenstines were scrious about moving to New England to keep an inn, the time to plan was at hand.

They saw two houses. The second, a Victorian building just off Main Street, backed up to a park threaded by the River Ware. It had a carriage house, apple and chestinut trees, five bedrooms and three baths on the second floor, three baths on the second floor, and enough space on the third for the Lobenstines. After an agony of months spent dredging up money, negotiating from California for the house and for a license from the town Board of Selectmen - no one had ever wanted to open an inn in Ware - and trying to arrange a transfer in the Postal Service for Lobenstine, the equation came together.

They moved, painted, repapered, joined the Chamber of Commerce and opened just in time to catch the overflow from the annual trek of city dwellers who had come to watch the leaves turn in the fall.

Mrs. Lobenstine is n woman of energy and warmth, able to hug strangers she has spoken to only on the phone. Gradually, she and her busband filled the house with ner biscand med the noise with primitive American antiques, ar-tifacts that act as a balm on guests seeking a few days of a simpler life. Gradually she learned to mult cider, bake country breads, and tender a cheerful greeting to a guest whose arrival interrupted a family fight.

"For us, there never is a Friday at 5 o'clock," she says. But for company, she says, they have had about 1,800 guests in the last four years: law and medical students studying for exams, people in search of their genealogy, young honeymooners in search of inexpensive privacy, old honeymooners in search of old times, people who want to spend time with a game of checkers or a book away from television and the phone, people who like to wander small towns as they would a museum.

In some of the guests, their reserve thawed by the fireplace and the absence of clammy city tensions, warm feelings rise like the sap in the apple trees in spring. "Friendly, real, beartwarming, yummy puff pancakes, all-around homey, caring, open feeling," Sam Weintraub wrote in the guest book before driving back home to Manhattan.
